LIABILITY

- In 1986 Congress passed the National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act. This law established the National Vaccine Injury Compensation Program (NVICP) which provided a no-fault compensation for those injured by vaccines, and exempted vaccine makers from liability.
- To date the U.S. Court of Claims has awarded almost 4 billion dollars to vaccine victims for catastrophic injuries, yet 2/3 of applicants are still denied compensation.
- This act requires vaccine providers to report all suspected vaccine related adverse events to the Vaccine Adverse Reporting System (VAERS). It is estimated that only 1% of adverse events are reported to VAERS.
- Vaccines are the only product for which a manufacturer is exempt from liability when their product injures or kills.
